1. Evolutions in CBR and Inclusive Development

“Disability inclusion is about society changing to accommodate differences . . .” Since its onset in the early eighties Community Based Rehabilitation - CBR - has evolved drastically. The paradigm shift towards the human rights model on disability, connected CBR with mainstream community development strategies. Nowadays CBR and Disability Inclusive Development - DID - (likely to be combined in Community Based Inclusion) are complementary approaches to pursue the one objective: disability inclusive societies. During this course you will be introduced to the state-of-the-art developments in CBR and DID, building upon the WHO CBR Guidelines, the ICF and the UNCRPD. It will be a highly practical course focusing on skills acquisition in Project Management and Evaluation; community mobilisation and networking; lobby and advocacy.

2. M&E, from Output to Impact

“One of the great mistakes is to judge policies and programs by their intentions rather than their results”. This quote by Milton Friedman clearly states that a common pitfall is to see just what we want to see. Can we claim we contribute to inclusive societies if the only thing we monitor are the services we deliver? Enablement, in collaboration with the University College of London, Royal Tropical Institute in The Netherlands and the University of Cape Town designed an Impact Toolkit, which consists of a set of evaluation tools to measure change at the society level. This Impact Toolkit is one of the instruments that will be addressed among a large variety of participatory Monitoring and Evaluation tools in the field of CBR and DID.

“A desk is a dangerous place from which to view the world”, once wrote the novelist Le Carré. This is especially true for managers and policy makers in CBR and Inclusive Development. It takes leaders to gear programs towards the needs as expressed by their staff and their beneficiaries. It takes managers to run these programs effectively and efficiently.
